Large ocean swells expected this weekend through next week; beachgoers advised to exercise caution

In anticipation of large ocean swells this weekend and next week, Ocean Safety Bureau Officials advise beachgoers to exercise caution while in the water.

“We are encouraging our beachgoers to use extra caution while on the north- and west-facing shores,” said OSB Ocean Safety Chief David Kalani Vierra. “Additionally, stay away from the rocky coastlines areas and keep a safe distance away from the high-water line.”

Beachgoers are also encouraged to visit lifeguarded beaches and speak with lifeguards about safe areas to swim in.

“For your safety, know the conditions, know your limits, and when in doubt, don’t go out,” added Chief Vierra.
