Kaua'i police keep blue cruise lights on 24/7

LĪHU'E – Under a new provision declared by Kaua'i Police Chief Todd G. Raybuck, officers and sergeants on patrol, unless otherwise specified and under special authorized circumstances, are now required to keep their vehicle's stationary blue cruise lights on at all times.

Patrol officers and sergeants are already required to keep their lights on at night, but now they must have them on while traveling roads during the day. The new mandate was created for a variety of reasons, including encouraging drivers to remain vigilant and abide by traffic laws.

"We wanted to bring awareness to police presence on our roadways to remind drivers to be mindful of their speed and driving habits," said Raybuck. "The purpose is also to increase visibility of an officer's presence to deter crime and create a greater sense of community safety."
